Day 66

Another exceptional day. I flew to the PWHO organisation in Um Qsar and intervened, yet again, in the PW process. I had a massive row with CO QDG about Article 5 tribunals. You need a very thick skin for this job. Anyhow, my view prevailed and I spent the rest of the day at the PWHO. Whilst waiting for the helicopter a bus driver very kindly provided myself and David Christie with a cup of very sweet tea which he was brewing in the luggage hold of his bus. We sat in another hold and waited for the lift - it was a very pleasant interlude. Compo rations again for supper but I did see a very large lizard which started to hiss as I approached it. The war continues.
